The best way for one, for anyone to actually paint a model face for any figure, at least in my personal opinion, is to use the traditional way of painting model figure faces. Now paint model figure face, on a one to 3 scale figure about, the face is about that size, that small. And it's very hard to do. And you're gonna have to paint it by painting each shadow, each highlight, of the contour of the face in order for it to make really nice and real. And that takes lot of time and effort.

A finely painted figure provides armor with a sense of life, historical context, and, in some cases, scale. Conversely, a poorly painted figure can mar the best of models. A figure's face, vital to the success of a model, is the trickiest part. Here's a five-step technique that will have you painting faces you can be proud of in minutes. If you want to paint a 1 1/2-inch tall figure, then photo and post him at 6-8 inches tall, you need to get good with detail painting... If you build with the mindset that your viewers can't focus unaided on a figure from closer than 4 inches or so (about 24 scale feet), and are going to be looking at them from a scale distance of about 48 to 60 feet , you can slack a bit...

Unfortunately for many who specialize in finishing aircraft, painting figures can seem like a black art. The following method is designed to help a modeler produce convincing figures with a minimum of guesswork in a few easy steps. This method is a simplification of techniques discussed by master modeler Sheperd Paine in How to Build Dioramas. It's broken into two stages: painting the flesh tones and painting the uniform and equipment.
