Permanence seems out of reach; some great apocalyptic event is on the horizon, and people view the future tentatively. Robert Altman’s “Short Cuts” captures that uneasiness perfectly in its interlocking stories about people who seem trapped in the present, always juggling. The movie is based on short stories by Raymond Carver, but this is Altman’s work, not Carver’s, and all the film really has in common with its source is a feeling for people who are disconnected - from relatives, church, ...
