So, it's a collection of stories, among them one called "Sword of Ice." I loved some of the stories, and was eagerly awaiting getting to said sword of ice, thinking it's either a sword that is made of ice, or perhaps turns things INTO ice. I get to the story, and the sword of ice is mentioned once, and only once.

Ser Arthur Dayne, known as the Sword of the Morning, was a famed and legendary knight from House Dayne and a member of Aerys II Targaryen's Kingsguard. Many considered him to have been the most chivalrous warrior of the Seven Kingdoms.[2] In the television adaptation Game of Thrones he is portrayed by Luke Roberts during a flashback in Season 6.

The Sword of the Morning is a title of House Dayne bestowed on the knight who bears the ancestral greatsword Dawn. Only a knight of House Dayne who is deemed worthy can carry it.[1] For this reason, the Swords of the Morning are all famous throughout the Seven Kingdoms.[2] If there is no Dayne knight considered worthy, the title lies dormant.

In the A Song of Ice and Fire novels, Ice is a huge and impressive weapon forged out of Valyrian steel and has been in the family's possession for over four centuries. The name of the blade however, is far more ancient. In the book "A Game of Thrones", Bran described the sword "as wide across as a man's hand, and taller even than Robb".
